Necessary changes remaining for Solvency II

Long-term guarantees

- Long-term products with guaranteed minimum returns should remain affordable for customers
- The long-term insurance business model makes it possible to even out effects of artificial volatility and short-term valuation effects
- As part of the upcoming new impact study, all proposals should be tested – including those of the insurance industry

Group solvability

- Surplus capital of subsidiaries must be recognized so that companies from countries with conservative financial reporting are not disadvantaged
- Diversification effects need to be taken into account
- The implementation of Solvency II must be neutral toward organizational forms so as not to cause structural changes that are not economically driven

▶ Take economic aspects of insurance business into full consideration
