

Allianz Impact and Leadership Program

DOING MORE WITH LESS

In today's business world the challenge to balance priorities is widespread regardless of the industry or workplace. And while all companies require unique strategies to achieve their business goals, the realities faced by not-for-profit organizations – those who take on society's most pressing issues – make their strategic needs that much more challenging.

As one of the world's leading financial services companies, and with over a century of experience, Allianz has consistently applied its deep strategic resources to successfully balance its own priorities, while making positive impacts. By combining this strength with the in-house expertise of the Allianz Foundation for North America and Allianz Technology, the Allianz Impact and Leadership Program empowers up-and-coming corporate leaders to apply their skills and knowledge to support select not-for-profit partners of the Allianz Foundation.

How does it work? First, our future leaders engage with a participating social-sector organization to identify a specific challenge, one that is often sidetracked for lack of resources, budget, or time. Our program participants then meet to define the scope of the challenge. Following in-depth training in strategic tools for process analysis, a team of 2-3 Allianz employees will spend one business week as in-kind consultants. Together, they'll employ process analysis tools in a workshop format to address and solve the identified challenge.

A NEW KIND OF PARTNERSHIP

Allianz Impact and Leadership is designed for all current and past Allianz Foundation grant recipients, providing invaluable consulting from some of our most talented and promising employees. In return, selected Allianz employees experience the singular opportunity to apply their entrepreneurial spirit, outside-the-box thinking, and collaborative leadership skills to the social sector.

Could your organization benefit from a week of in-kind, in-depth consulting? We're here to help.
